PROF. SAUNDERS, and Mr. Lee Meriwether left Tuesday. Professor Saunders goes direct to the Pacific coast, Mr. Meriwether will stay over at Calgary and visit some of the big stock ranches there. He will then go to Banff, and thence through to Victoria.

The shifting of the pavement along the Bulletin office and Rose's drug store will considerably to the appearance and width of the street, but what about the Police, also those steps, they are unsightly, to say the least, and do not look at all up to date stuck out there.

Donald McDonald, a delegate from New Brunswick, who has come out here to see Alberta, thinks it is the best farming country in America. He has seen some fine farms here, and he said that he would like to see some of the best of the country.

Turns is considerable kick about the fact that Chas. Bar not being run in a proper manner. It is reported in town here that parties have been unable to get across the river owing to the cable being allowed to hang so low in the water they claim it is a piece of negligence, and something that two men could easily rectify. To make matters worse they have to go four miles back to strike the main line again in a struggle to reach a job.

Mr. F. Macdonald of the Alberta hotel is getting in some fine specimens of game and grasses in response to the prize he offered for the best. He purposes taking a trip in the country himself to gather more, and will when he has sufficient, arrange them round the hotel office according to the district from whence they come. Mr. D. A TALE WITH A TAIL BEHIND.

A skirt went down Jasper Avenue the other day, a woman of course was in it, but that is another story. The skirt was long or these comments would never have been written. It flapped against each step outside the house door as its owner went out in the noonday sun. Then it was fresh and clean and new, and was gaily clutched in the small gloved hand of the wearer as she tripped lightly along. Once or twice it swept the sidewalk, there comparatively clean, but gathered a rim of dust as it bobbed energetically into an adjacent store. Within it hung upon the floor, and dabbled in a pool of tobacco juice left there by some unspeakably filthy species of the "genus homo." The "drilling" with which the hem was lined became soaked and discolored.

The skirt went into several stores. It was bargain day. Bundle after bundle was grasped by its owner, and with each additional package the care she had given her trailing role was divided. From the sheer impossibility of holding it up, it was dragged unceremoniously. A thin film of dust rose from it as it cut and swept the street, and rose about the person of the woman. The edge was stained past recognition and quite appeared here and there. From the freshness of a picture it turned to the color of a printer's towel. In one short hour it had lost its comeliness and poetry—in two it was unrecognizable, in three it didn't become it owner at all, for it had turned scavenger and was performing the duties usually assigned to the town dump. Yet what wonder! Through what a strange compound of nastiness did it take its way! First the dried spurs of a consumptive man, next the refuse of a stable, the traces of a drunkard's belch, a heavy stain in front of somebody's residence; but chiefly dust, dust, dust, that was in itself the dried and volatile residuum of all these unspeakable things and more.

At 4 p. m. the woman said: "oh how tired I am." She was at home then. Her arms were stiff and numb with carrying parcels and the labor of trying to save the skirt, as if its dirt-defiled lengths were some precious possession.

At 4.15 p. m. the woman said: "Why it is terribly dirty and ragged already." She was looking as she spoke at the skirt she had taken off.

At 4.30 p. m. the woman said: "It's a filthy fashion: Oh, I wish it would change." She was in the bath tub, washing the dust from her ankles which went out in the early afternoon white and came back in a few hours a bluish black.

And the funny part of it is that neither this woman nor any one of the ten thousand other women who have just the same experience, will let off one of their superfluous three inches until the fashion does change. You'd think they would—but no they won't and you're only a brute if you suggest it.

A HIDE IN THE COUNTRY.

"All right there, let her go gallagher! a plunge or two from the nest horse, a spasmic bound forward on the part of the other, and we were off, out of the town and on the high road to Fort Saskatchewan at a snail's pace, leaving a cloud of whirling dust behind us for any friend who might be coming our way.

What a day it was to be sure. There was a blue shadow or two in the sky ahead of us, just sufficient to let you know they were occasionally have shadows in this part of the world, otherwise it was a perfect day. The sun shone out at certain intervals, and warmed you when it did to the very coxles of your heart, but the cool wind that played on your face, and gently stirred the trees, and made the long grass sing a sort of holiday melody, kept it from freckling your manly cheek, or browning you to any appreciable extent. A good team, a couple of cigars, a jovial companion, someone of the feminine gender to talk about, and what more could an ordinary mortal want? Not much indeed.

In fifteen minutes we had left the outskirts of Edmonton away in our rear, in thirty were humping along through a country carpeted with a galaxy of wild flowers, divided off here and there with new home-steads, and fields bowing beneath a wealth of ripened grain. In one hour, less five minutes we had passed the halfway house by Chablis creek, and in two by our nickel reporter pulled up this side of the Saskatchewan and waited for our honest ferryman to bring his craft across. It is a pretty sight that meets your eyes as you near the river bank after leaving the homestead of Jim Reed on your left. The country all around you looks very beautiful in its summer foliage. Here it is more settled up, for the roofs of numerous farm houses are to be seen amongst the green foliage of the landscape, patches of heavily laden oats and barley stand out in gentle relief to the timber that marks the Saskatchewan's windings. Across the stream on the declivity that slopes to the river rise the building of the Fort, from the flag pole of which flies the glorious old Union Jack, a silence promise of protection and justice to all comers. A modest very modest fee of 50 cents in Yankee or Dominion silver pays for the passage of yourself and team, and a moment later the force of the current which is less rapid here than at Edmonton, is carrying you across to the creaking of the steel cable and rope guys. On your way over you have a fine view of the river up and down and which at this point is commandingly broad, with a straight stretch of a mile or more. It is lined with trees on either side; and but for the appearance of the water, which at this period of the year is discolored and muddy, would remind you of the least populated reaches of the Rhone or even the Danube and the Seine.

And now we are over and skirting round the barracks, enter what is now, and will be in the future, the main st of Fort Saskatchewan's town. There was not a superabundance of people about, but a bareheaded, barefooted youngster of the charming age of six and a half, with his mouth full of apple, directed us with a series of guttural sounds and emphatic pointings of his grubby little fist to the house and office of Senior Francis Tims, who we found with his coat off deep in a column of figures and the mystery of surveyed and unsurveyed town lots.

"Welcome to Fort Saskatchewan boys," was his greeting—glad to see you, come in, and so he was. It was none of your stereotyped speeches that you sometimes hear uttered, when you know full well the speaker wishes you a hundred miles away. When you have been jugged and jolted around the universe; and brought into contact with people of every clime and class, you learn instinctively by the pressure of a man's hand, and by the look in his eye whether he means what he says or no. Good old Tims! We don't often indulge but on the first opportunity we will drink to your bachelor abode, for right welcome did you make us. May your hopes and faith in the place you have stuck by be realized.

Yes! Fort Saskatchewan. It is a pretty spot—a prettier in some respects you don't often see, for in whatever direction you turn there you find a rolling well timbered country, rich in a luxuriant growth of grass, and herbs, and carpeted everywhere with a profusion of wild fruits. By going a short distance down the banks, till about opposite the Lang estate you obtain a splendid view of the country away on the north side of the Saskatchewan, and as you look back towards Edmonton in a south westerly direction the scene before you is especially fine. Two things there are that strike a stranger entering the town, for the first time One is the genial ready way the folks there have of greeting you. The other is the scarcity of dogs about the place. In this respect it beats a Mexican Altea all to bits. There is only about 12 or 14 per inhabitant and when in the effusion of their spirits they greet you in chorus with mouth open and tail erect as they have been taught to do, or combine to serenade you in the stillness of the nighttime, the effect is exceedingly jolly and musical. We suggest the necessity or advisability of forming a Kennel association, and of giving prizes to the one with the most good points. Among such a number there is no telling what prodigy you may have. You know those lines: "Full many a peal of purest ray serene The dark unfathomed caves of ocean bear. Full many a flower is forced to bloom unseen. And waste its sweetness in the desert air."

What a pity they should waste theirs and all unheeded conceal their birth and talents. We never saw a more spirited well bred looking pack of canines in our life. They are so well bred that when you speak roughly to them they steal silently away. A walk to the race course, and round the Police reserve, a peep at the inside of the barracks, a pleasant visit to the Major and Mrs. Griesbach in the evening, a chat with Tims about all things in the heavens and under the earth, and the first thing we know, a rooster is crowing in Sunday morning.

Sunday morning! what a difference between a Sunday in the Northwest and a Sunday in the East. How peaceable and quiet and fresh and invigorating everything seems. It is just as fair a day as nature could turn out, and as you throw yourself down in the long grass that is everywhere around you, you realize what a beautiful place this world of ours would be if it wasn't for some of the people in it. So the morning comes and goes. There is just time to overhaul a grizzly—a Saskatchewan grizzly with iron bars but no claws, and to learn how the fine gold found in the gravel in the river is washed and extracted, and to get our lunch, when with a whoop and flourish of a somewhat diminutive whip the livery man brings our team to the door and we're off again, on our way back to town, this time on the other side of the river through the Clover Bar settlement.

Space won't allow us to say all we could say of the country we passed through. It is peopled with farms that without exception have a prosperous well to do air about them there is no getting over. Everywhere the crops looked grand and the spirit of contentment shone in the face of every farmer we met. As we climbed Old Man's Knoll and looked to the South, East and North a panorama of well kept homesteads, of harvest fields where the reapers had already been at work, and of stock lazily grazing, met our gaze, the like of which it is not easy to imagine or describe.

One little incident occurred at Fort Saskatchewan which about illustrates the spirit of the people. Said we to a resident there, "come, don't you think by charging so much at the ferry, you do the place a lot of harm, why don't you kick about it?" Said they, "you see its this way—there's a little romance about it stranger, the man who runs it, was put to considerable expense in getting the cable and fixing it up, and he hasn't made so over much out of it yet. When he's got back what he laid out and made a fair profit we going to ask him to reduce his rates." Further comment isn't necessary.

THEIR A STRANGER IN THE TOWN.

(A satirical moving episode)

There's a stranger in the town
And his hat has got no crown
He's a hood.
His name I do not know
But to reap and not to sow
Is his creed.

I met him near the school,
Looking sicker than a mule,
As he walked.
He'd been that way a year,
And he drew from me a tear.
When he talked.

It was fever so he said,
That attacked him in the head,
Till he fell.
From a man who tipped the weight
At just one ninety-eight,
To a shell.

It was sorrowful to see
The way he looked at me,
With his eyes.
One arm was in a sling
And the other he would fling,
To the skies.

There never was a life
That had been so full of strife
As his own.
He had travelled in the snow
And had lived a month or so,
On a bone.

Would I feel his pulse? It beat
Awful slow, 'cause the heat
Did him up.
No! he did not know a soul
That would help him on the whole,
But his pup.

Then I pulled a dollar note
From the recess of my coat
Like a saint.
When I met him in an hour
He was "upside down," without power,
Ditto — faint!

There's a stranger in the town
And his hat has got no crown
He's a hood.
His name I cannot give
But there's one of us won't live
When we meet.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY. REGINA, August 23.

Cayley presented a petition from the town of Calgary asking for city incorporation.

Bill reported that the standing committee on agriculture considered it advisable in order to secure enforcement of the prairie fire ordinance that a prosecution fund of $2,000 should be provided. He explained that most of the fires along the line of railway had been caused by C. P. R. engines. It had been attempted to enforce the law by proceedings against employees of the company. That had been proven a failure. It was now proposed to move against the company itself in which case a considerable amount of money would be necessary as it was a point of law whether or not the company could be held responsible for the acts of its employees.

Haultain said that the executive were aware of the necessity of more thorough enforcement of the fire ordinance, but they would prefer not to be bound so definitely as they would be if the report were carried by the house.

With the consent of the mover the report was merely received by the house.

Betts moved that a return of officials employed at the Columbian exhibition with their salaries and expenses be laid on the table.

Haultain said the mover might have waited until the accounts were brought down but as he seemed to be in haste, the desired return would be brought down as soon as the preparation of the public accounts would permit.

Insinger and Lincham were added to the agricultural committee.

The private bill to confirm an agreement whereby the town of Edmonton will guarantee bonds of the Edmonton electric light company to the amount of $10,000 was read a first time.

Haultain moved the second reading of the bill to amend the ordinance respecting registration of partnership. He explained that the present ordinance provided for the registration of partnerships in the land titles office. The registrars of these offices were under federal and not under Territorial control. The bill contemplated removing the registration to the offices of the clerks of the several judicial districts where chattel mortgages are registered, which offices are under Territorial control.

Betts objected to the expense of re registration.

The second reading was carried and the bill passed through committee of the whole.

The game ordinance was considered in committee of the whole and the provision regarding licenses was discussed. Insinger moved that licenses to non-residents be granted by J. P.'s instead of from Regina. That land prospectors might shoot without license, and that guests of residents of the Territories might have a free permit for five days shooting. All were defeated.

Brett moved that foxes, minks and badgers be protected on account of their services in the destruction of gophers.

Wilkins said he would support the motion if the mover would include the skunk, as well as the badger, but he could not countenance such evident partiality towards the badger as that displayed by the mover.

The motion was defeated only the mover voting for it.

Haultain suggested that as it was desirable to have the game ordinance issued in large numbers separately from other ordinances, the ordinance of last year and the present amendments be consolidated. To this end, and with the consent of the introducer of the present bill he would move that a consolidated bill be introduced by the mover of the present bill. Motion agreed to.

Haultain laid on the table a return showing the amounts of money paid out from July 1st to August 19th, being funds belonging to the current fiscal year and which had not been appropriated by vote of the assembly only covering the period ending on June 30th. The amount was $9,819.16.

House adjourned.

REGINA, August 24.

Cayley gave notice of the appointment of an irrigation committee.

Brett gave notice of a question respecting inspection of coal mines.

Haultain's bill respecting registration of partnerships passed a third reading.

Prince moved the second reading of his bill to provide that chattel mortgages made outside the territories should not hold good without re registration. He pointed out that at present only chattel mortgages made in the Territories required registration and that these outsiders were allowed an advantage over our own people, cases had come under his own observation where property sold by people from the States to residents of the Territories had been seized under chattel mortgage from the States although the mortgages had not been registered in Canada. This manifest injustice his bill was intended to remove by compelling the registration of all chattel mortgages. Bill passed second reading.

Mowat moved the second reading of his bill to protect horse breeders. He said the bill was almost a copy of the Manitoba act on the subject passed at last session. The intention was to give the owners of good horses a lien on the stock produced. The owners of certain classes of horses might register them at Regina on payment of a fee of $5.00. They were then entitled to file a lien within nine months after service which lien held good for a certain period on the foal. He thought the bill would encourage the breeding of good horses by the protection it gave, and would also be a source of revenue to the Northwest government.

Haultain thought there was no more reason to give horse breeders the special protection of a lien than to give other people. To give them this special protection without the necessity for it being shown would be to set a bad precedent, to complicate business, and to give horse breeders an undue advantage over other people. No sufficient reason had been shown for doing this.

Insinger said there was a difference between the dealing of a merchant and a horse breeder. The business of the latter was necessarily done on credit and the protection offered him by the bill was most desirable.

Lincham said he was opposed to the principle of the bill. If passed it would be found useless and unpracticable.

Davidson said he was opposed to the bill. The horse business could and should be done on a cash basis. A lien note could now be demanded by the horse breeder if he thought it desirable, and further legislation on the subject was not necessary.

The second reading was defeated by a vote of 12 to 8. The yeas and nays were not taken.

Oliver moved the second reading of the bill to confirm an agreement between the Edmonton electric light and power company and the town of Edmonton whereby the latter agreed to guarantee the bonds of the former to the amount of $10,000 to enable the company to increase its plant. He said that as the bill was introduced as a private bill its provisions would not be in conflict with anything contained in the general legislation of the assembly. Last session a provision similar to the leading provision of this bill had been embodied in the municipal ordinance simply to serve a final purpose. As the assembly had already agreed to the principle of municipalities guaranteeing the bonds of certain companies there could be no objection offered to a similar provision being incorporated in a private bill.

Insinger said he would like to know from the mover what position he would take if the house should require a vote of consent by the ratepayers as suggested by the standing orders committee, and also if he was prepared to inform the house as to the total present assessment and indebtedness of the town of Edmonton.

Oliver replied that although a vote was not necessary of the house in carrying out an established principle should require such a vote he would not consider the amendment fatal to the bill. He would be prepared to give the information required to the committee of the whole. Second reading agreed to.

Neff's bill respecting infectious diseases of domestic animals was read a second time.

With leave of the house Oliver introduced the game ordinance as amended and consolidated. The bill was given its second reading and went into committee of the whole.

Insinger moved that the close season for prairie chicken commence on January 1st as before and not on December 1st as last amended. This was agreed to.

Davidson moved that the close season for chickens be extended from September 15th as in Manitoba. This was defeated and the bill was reported for third reading.

Haultain laid on the table replies to the memorials of the house passed at last session.

House adjourned.

REGINA, August 25.

Cayley from the standing orders committee reported the petition of the town of Calgary for incorporation as a city. The petition was received.

Brett asked the executive what steps had been taken to secure the inspection of coal mines.

Haultain replied that he had tried to secure the services of a Mr. Giffen, inspector of coal mines in Nova Scotia but had then arranged with the inspector of British Columbia mines and hoped to have a full report to lay before the house at this session.

Magrath gave notice of a question regarding the dismissal of Northwest government officials since last session.

Jelly gave notice of a question as to the number of officials employed by the Northwest government, their salaries and hours of labor.

Neff's bill respecting infectious diseases of domestic animals was considered in committee of the whole and progress reported. The bill provides penalties for owners of diseased animals who do not quarantine them on suspicion of disease. Also penalties for parties disposing of diseased animals. Provisions made for a district inspection by a veterinary on order of the lieutenant governor in council.

Princes bill respecting mortgages and sales of personal property was considered in committee of the whole and progress reported.

House adjourned.

REGINA, August 25.

The batch of papers laid on the table of papers laid on the table the house yesterday by Haultain contained some interesting reading. It is to be regretted that their number and length are such as to prevent them being given in full. They are copies of resolutions passed by the assembly at its last session and the replies thereto from the C. P. R. Company and the federal government.

First on the list was a request to the C. P. R. Company to fence their line through the Territories on account of the destruction of stock caused by their trains. Their reply was in effect that as only 170 horses cattle and hogs were killed on their tracks in the Territories in 1892, the loss so caused was not sufficient to warrant the fencing of 13,000 miles of track. That besides the cost of fencing, the existence of fences by causing snow drifts to form in winter would increase the cost and difficulty of operating the road.

The trouble in connection with the fence question would not have arisen as yet did the company pay principally and in full for all stock destroyed by their trains, but the fact is that they refuse adequate payment in all cases, and wherever it was possible took refuge behind the plea that if the animal was not killed within the limits of the owners property they are not liable at all—this view, having been taken by the courts. This making practically reserves the right of cattle to roam at large over the unoccupied prairie, and if the company continues to shelter itself behind it the assembly will be forced in the protection of the public to simply compel the company to put up the fences and put in the cattle guards to which Mr. Van Horne so strongly objects.

REGINA, August 25.

Number two is a resolution addressed to the federal government asking for a more general distribution of the mounted police in the fall with a view to more efficient assistance in preventing the spread of prairie fires. The reply is from Fred White, comptroller of police and is very long. The idea conveyed is that the police are willing to assist by manual labor in the suppression of prairie fires but are not compelled to do so. That they are not sufficiently numerous to be spread over the whole country. Pointing out that in some cases in which offenders were brought to justice by the exertions of the police they were allowed to go with a merely nominal fine. And that settlers should rely more upon themselves for the suppression of prairie fires. This reply of course, brings up the question as to who is responsible for the quenching of fires on government or C. P. R. land. If all the land were occupied by settlers or if it were taxable for fire protection purposes, Mr. White's argument would be all right, but with half or three-fourths of the land in the hands of the C. P. R. or the government and therefore unoccupied and untaxable it will strike most people that some share of responsibility rests upon the holders of their lands. As the government has seen fit to exempt the C. P. R. land from taxation of course it must be held responsible for the results of that exemption.
